Asian markets closed broadly lower on Friday, as China's exports growth unexpectedly fell in March, while geopolitical tensions over Syria also weighed on sentiment. Both China and Hong Kong equities ended lower, while shares in Japan and South Korea rose. Gains in financial stocks buoyed the Nikkei share average, while the KOSPI stock index closed higher on foreign buying. Among South-east Asian markets, Philippines and Vietnam were the underperformers, with their stock indices declining by 1.8% and 1.4% respectively.

European markets edged up on Friday, with receding fears over a global trade war adding to positive sentiment. Investors also shifted their focus to the results season, while merger and acquisition headlines also drove share price movements. Britain's top share index inched up, but gains were pared by a plunge in software firm Sage after the company pared its revenue forecast. US markets ended lower on Friday, weighed by a slump in bank shares, while worries over escalating tensions in Syria added to jitters. Shares in JP Morgan Chase, Wells Fargo and Citigroup fell despite reporting quarterly earnings that largely beat analysts' expectations. On early Saturday, the US, UK and France hit Syria with air strikes, targeting its chemical weapons sites in retaliation for Syrian leader Bashar al-Assad's suspected chemical weapons attack on civilians.

US Treasuries were almost flat on Friday. Yield on the benchmark ten-year note edged lower.

Oil prices firmed on Friday, posting the strongest weekly gain since July, driven by concerns over possible Western military action in Syria. Meanwhile, gold prices also steadied on Friday, as lingering uncertainty over Syria supported demand for safe-haven assets.
